Information on F Cumana and Circumflegrea is based on working timetables I was able to acquire after considerable efforts during a visit to Naples in 1987. Timetables for F Cumana have neither been included in national TTs nor local TTs for many years. The only information publically available appeared to be occasional poster TTs at some stations. Information on F Circumflegrea ~~was~~ ^{were} even more elusive. No timetables ~~are~~ ^{were} available or have ever been available as far as I know ever since the line opened in about 1964. No poster TTs ~~are~~ ^{were} on view and most of the stations have no nameboards! Former names: [] Distances in kilometres

The only remaining section of a once extensive system is an electrified suburban service on part of the Ferrovia Roma - Fiuggi. The operation is more in the nature of a tramway with frequent stops. The names of the stops appear on small signs and were obtained by personal observation, there being no published timetables or other publicity. (Names updated to 2004)
